REPORT OF THE SCHOOLS.

We are proud of our Schools, of our children and of our teachers.

Are we satisfied ? By no means . To advance is the law of life. There are faults to be corrected ; there are better methods to be attained ; there are truer ideals to be conceived of ; there are larger things to be worked for.

Education is such a mighty thing, so complex, so far reaching, so all embracing, that we can no more get a conception of its greatness and of its value from any one view point, than we can get a conception of the vastness of the universe, by simply looking out over the narrow horizon of a small sandy hill-bounded plain.

Education is more to the life than a mine of gold. It is the birthright of every child, that it, not only, be taught how, but that it be given opportunity, to delve for this treasure.

To this end the school and the home should work as a unit.

It would be as difficult to separate out the influence of the one and the other and determine how much the school and how much the home is responsible for results in any given case, as to separate out the fibre of the wool and the cotton each from the other, after they have been carded together, spun together, and finally woven together into the one web.

The home influence should keep the child each day in his place, obedient, trustworthy, courageous, patient as regards difficulties, and in as good physical condition as possible.

We have an honor list for perfect attendance, if this included the names of all those who have been characterized habitually—in the school room and on the school grounds, during sessions and during intermissions—by ready obedience, true courtesy, gentle manners and clean language, the list would be long.

It would be severe, but would it be too severe, if there were a black list for the names of those not so characterized?

Profanity or low language in a pupil of any age calls for quarantine as much as a case of diphtheria or small pox.

Such evils must be barred out by the most rigid measures.

There is reason to rejoice for the opportunity opened during these last years, for attending the higher schools.

It is a healthy stimulus to our pupils, it is something to look forward to, something to prepare for. But we shall make a great and grave mistake if we hurry our children out of the rural schools.

The primary school is the place for the laying of foundations.

To be able to pass the entrance test, is but a small part of the preparation needed for advanced work.

There are habits of study and of thought, habits of reading, of observing and investigating, in which the pupil should be well started, in order that he may get the largest good from High School or Academy.

Any individual in the schools or out of the schools, who has learned to think, to investigate, to observe carefully and critically is well started on the Kings highway to a liberal Education.

MARY C. BERRY,
For the Board of Education.

THIRTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE
PELHAM FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

TRUSTEES' REPORT.

The Library Trustees, in this, the Thirteenth Report of the Library, have no special suggestions to offer to the people of the town in regard to the library. The past year has been one of good patronage of the library and an increasing interest has been taken in the reading room, which with its tables well laden with the best of the magazines should be patronized still more extensively. We would call the attention of every one to the Encyclopedias to which they can have access at any time and from which information of a reliable kind can be obtained upon any subject in which they are interested. During the year the library of William Sherburne, donated by him, has been added to the library. Gifts of books from Charles A. Wyman, George A. Seavey, J. H. Bridges and Albert W. Rook, are gratefully acknowledged. New books have been purchased to the amount of one hundred and will be in circulation before this report will be printed.

The trustees are happy to say that lists of books have been handed in and we hope all will kindly give lists of books from which to select. Thanks are extended to all who have kindly contributed magazines and other reading matter for the reading room, and hope to receive more the coming year.
